May 21-23, 2013

Birmingham, AL

AGENDA

The Common Core State Standards require students to answer questions drawing evidence from the text they are reading. Asking text-dependent questions is an essential instructional skill that was not previously emphasized in classrooms and instructional materials.

This professional development opportunity will provide practice with district-adopted textbooks to:

- 1) Identify text-dependent and non-text-dependent questions
- 2) Learn to develop quality text-dependent questions that include examples with direct responses and inferences. Additionally, some questions will draw student attention to academic language, vocabulary and syntax involved in understanding complex text.

Each session will provide focused training on evaluating existing questions for alignment and writing good text-dependent questions to sources. Participants will work individually and in district teams using their own materials. Teams will receive whole group feedback to refine their work.
